Emily Grace Berry

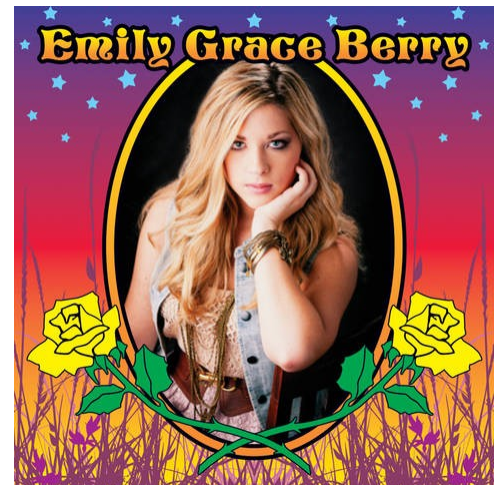

Emily Grace Berry grew up listening to Texas singer/songwriters, and now she is one. It didn't take much time; she's singing full time now at twenty. Growing up on a Texas ranch is a good way to find country music, and being a kid anywhere is an easy way to find contemporary pop. But her music-loving parents wanted her tastes to transcend genre, so they turned her on to category-defiers like Linda Ronstadt, Gram Parsons, Emmylou Harris, the Dixie Chicks, and their own Texas favorite, Jerry Jeff Walker. When Jerry Jeff played a ranch party gig in 2000, Emily got up and sang "Redneck Mother" with him. She was in the third grade. Jerry Jeff's drummer that day was power pop rocker Freddie Steady Krc, now Emily's musical mentor, and he's proud to have her at SteadyBoy. Emily wrote two of these tracks with Freddie, and her covers of "Someday Soon" and "Long, Long Time" are sung straight from the heart.

"The first time I heard Emily Grace Berry I thought I had just left the Palomino club in North Hollywood and was on my way to the Troubadour to catch a country rock show. Gram & Emmy Lou, Ronstadt and Burrito Bros were ringing in my ears. I knew I had to work with her!"
