Emily Grace Berry-Canyon Music

From the heart of her native Texas, singer/songwriter Emily Grace Berry channels the vibrant musical spirit of California's Laurel Canyon. It was a soulful brand of country set to a rock and roll beat in the seventies when artists like Linda Ronstadt, Gram and Emmylou, and Jackie DeShannon first created it. Now Emily puts a Texas brand on canyon music, and she can do that, because she grew up on a Texas ranch. In fact, when Texas music innovator, Jerry Jeff Walker, played a ranch party south of Dallas in 2000, Emily got up and sang "Redneck Mother" with him. She was in the third grade. Jerry Jeff's drummer that day was power pop rocker Freddie Steady Krc, now Emily's musical mentor. Freddie heard the canyon sound in Emily, so he called this record Canyon Music. What is canyon music? Dark, mysterious, sometimes playful, always timeless, sung straight from the heart by a riveting vocalist wise beyond her musical years, Emily Grace Berry.

"Emily Grace Berry...exudes the pure honesty and innocence of the 20-year-old country gal she is, yet her smooth vocals are startlingly mature..."

--Hannah Stuart-Leach, Shindig! Magazine
