Chase Hamblin-A Fine Time

Infectious pop songs, lavish Beatlesque production, psychedelic imagery, and a sweet, soaring voice to pull them all together. Rufus Wainwright? Jeff Buckley? Beck? Houston's Chase Hamblin brings the passion of Buckley and Beck along with the lush sound and impressionistic imagery of Wainwright, but he's also as jangly and hip as the Small Faces grooving in Itchycoo Park. Put another way, he rocks. "We're Gonna Make It" is a rock and roll nugget of pure radio-friendly sunshine; "Never Let You Go" an urgent blast of power pop; "Bye Bye" a swirling Sgt. Pepper tour de force.

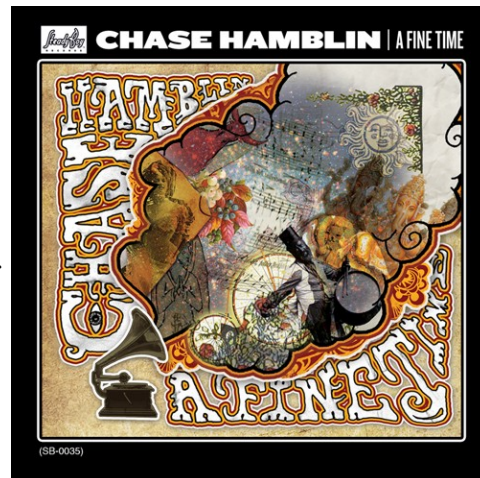

The sixties are alive and well in Hamblin's indie pop world, but so is the Texas singer/songwriter music tradition. Chase Hamblin: remember the name, remember the sound, remember the songs. It's all too beautiful.

In a word, Chase Hamblin's five-song A Fine Time is fab. Its heavy post-Sgt. Pepper's vibe extends from the pristine production and sweeping melodies to Hamblin's Lennonesque vocals and flowery lyrics.
